Beschreibung der Immobilie

Some homes are designed to impose themselves on their surroundings. This one does exactly the opposite.

Conceived as a piece of architecture integrated into the hillside, the residence extends horizontally through mature vegetation, stone, concrete and expansive planes of glass, allowing the landscape to become a permanent part of the interiors.

The architecture is deliberately serene. Clean lines, flat roofs and a natural material palette create a contemporary aesthetic free from excess. Inside, wood brings warmth to a neutral composition of stone and soft tones, while floor-to-ceiling windows open the principal living spaces towards the mountains and the Mediterranean.

The home is arranged across several levels, all connected by lift, making movement throughout the property exceptionally comfortable. Two bedrooms are located on the intermediate level and a further two on the upper floor, all with en-suite bathrooms, creating a well-balanced layout that offers privacy and independence.
